Colour Combinations

Exterior paint schemes typically involve three colours. The dominant colour used to paint the walls, the secondary colour used to paint such areas as patios and verandas, and the trim colour, used to accent such areas as, eaves, posts and window sills etc. Here is an example of a harmonious triadic colour scheme used in different ways. Let one colour dominate and use the two others for accent and trim.

- | | |
|---------------|-------|
| 1. Primary: | Walls |
| 2. Secondary: | Patio |
| 3. Accent: | Trims |

Deciding what goes where can be tricky sometimes and could make all the difference in getting the desired effect.

So here are some useful tips:

1. In choosing a main colour, start with the roof to ensure that it will work harmoniously with the primary wall colour.
2. Identify any other colours around that need to be considered in selecting the main colour.
3. Choose the main colour. The colours should not compete against each other; but work together to bring out the best features of your home.
4. Next choose a colour for your patio or veranda.
5. Finally select the trim colour for the window sills, shutters, hoods, eaves etc.
6. Affix the colour chips to the areas being painted
7. Step back and consider the combination.
8. If it doesn't give the desired effect, change the main colour and repeat the process until you achieve the combination you like.

Don't forget that the three colours are a combination that already works well together, so it may simply be a matter of which of the three combinations you like best.

Actual colour will vary depending on the product, gloss level, application method, film variance, substrate, and light source. For critical matches, a sample of paint should be applied, allowed to dry, and checked before proceeding with entire job.

Recommended Paint System for Architectural Applications

STEP 1

PRE-TREATMENT (Optional)
Some Surfaces require pre-treatments for a range of problems, such as chalking, mildew, algae and efflorescence among other problems.

STEP 2

NEW & RENEWED SURFACES
Primers help to maximize sheen and coverage of paint, and provide a more uniform appearance. They also provide an additional wear layer, especially on exterior surfaces and surfaces exposed to heavy use. When using dark colours, a tinted primer in a colour close to the topcoat, will provide better coverage and minimise the need for additional coatings.

STEP 3

TOPCOAT/FINISHING COAT
Generally two coats are recommended for exterior surfaces. Some dark colours may require an additional coat. If repainting in the same colour, one coat may suffice.

A great exterior scheme can enhance curb appeal and even the resale value of a home. Berger recommends lightfast colours for better colour retention. Consider the landscaping and those items that aren't being painted such as roofing. Accentuate the positive and be careful not to accent gutters and downspouts. Painting a house in a light colour will visually bring it forward and can make it seem even larger. Dark colours can make a home look smaller but more substantial. A tall house can appear shorter by painting the upper portion in a deeper tone than the bottom. Light or white is a good choice for windowsills as they reflect heat and sunlight back into the atmosphere. A Berger Colour Advisor is available to help you make the right choice.
